Tired of jumping from one application to another to schedule the tasks and managing different calendars, diary and tasks in a single email client? Can't stand the fact that you have to waste the time for searching for the items that you have been working on and are waiting to have it sent out? Then the best way is to use Syncfusion's Sync Outlook App, which you can run as a portable app on your mobile device, a standalone program on your PC and even as a web application for your web-based business applications. Sync Outlook App for your PC, Android and iOS Sync Outlook App is a Thunderbird plug-in that allows you to synchronize all your Thunderbird messages, emails, contacts, tasks, diaries and calendar with your Microsoft Outlook account. The synchronization is a process, and the plugin operates on a user's local computer in the background while being connected to the Internet. The program also supports the import and export of your data to/from Microsoft Outlook in CSV format as well as RSS and RSS-enabled email. Sync Outlook App does not replace Outlook, but simply uses it to bring the data that is stored in the Thunderbird application into Microsoft Outlook. The official Syncfusion website is www.syncfusion.com and you can download Syncfusion Sync Outlook App from there. The file name is `thunderbird_sync.exe` and the file size is 12.3 MB. Therefore, you can explore the emails with various text editors on various devices and in offline mode. A useful tool for convert MB, MBX and MBOX filesQ: Extend numpy array to np.logical I have a numpy array a = np.array([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]]). I would like to extend this array to np.logical as a = np.logical([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]]). How can I do this? A: A (logical) array is just a float, so just pass it to a boolean array:

np.array([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]], dtype=float) #
[[1 2 3] [4 5 6]] np.array([[1, 2, 3], [4, 5, 6]], dtype=bool) # [[ True True False] As a check, you can see it's the same array: a[1] = np.arange(10, dtype=float) # [8 9] a ==
a[1] # array([[ True, True, False], # [ True, True, False]]) The only difference is that a is a float array, while a[1] is a boolean array. If you really need an array of bools
