Dundas Island Dundas Island is an island in the River Thames in England near Reading in Berkshire. It is the only island in the river apart from the present-day island of Oatlands Island and the site of Reading University's main campus. History The island is mentioned in the Domesday Book and is said to have been colonised by monks from Winchester and Reading Abbey, who had made a small settlement on it. Although there are no longer any physical remains, the island is noted in the reading telephone directory, and maps of the area, as "The Island in the river 'between' the Oxford and Cherwell canals". Location An island in the River Thames between Twickenham and Teddington, Dundas Island is just downstream of the southern end of the Jubilee Bridge and approximately north-west of the Whitley End power station and the eastern edge of the Cutteslowe Park residential development. It is in length from north to south and, including a small man-made island to the south-west. The island is just to the east of Chalk Farm and the Shepperton area on the Cotswold Waterway; the 'Duck Island' being the bridge between there and the site of the University of Reading, is the island for which the larger one is named. There was also an island in the river between
